The Three Pillars of “Roadie” wisdom.

First an apology

I’ve attempted to frame this humorously. Often my humour misses, just remember this is meant with love, respect and the greatest affection.

There are many truisms I could cite. However, these three are (relatively) lacking profanity, but are profound. I can’t help but think they almost say the same thing….

1. This was a beautiful succinct truism relayed by a former trainee barrister, who saw the way forward in Rock n Roll. He became a giant in the field (and thoroughly well-deserved)
2. This was one of the politer profound sayings of a fellow brass player, who went into rock n roll, and has had a massive career as an innovator and problem solver.
3. A beautiful reflection of a very gentle man, with a hard and necessary shell, his summary beautifully encapsulates his wonderful philosophy. Despite having been on a “government sponsored holiday” his humour and kindness is deeply appreciated.

1. “Ignorance is acceptable, stupidity is not”

Nothing really needs to be added, this is fantastic. I would add after the first clause (and obviously inevitable). It links beautifully with the other two statements.

2. “You Can’t educate pork”

The simple observation of non-acceptance of ignorance, which inevitably leads to stupidity.

3. “You must remain true to your own standards. Others are entitled to the same, you don’t compromise yours because of others”

Profound and once again “how to avoid stupidity. It also suggests that those standards “others” may have, can form the basis of modification, and learning for oneself.
